

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF SOUTH CAROLINA
CHARLESTON DIVISION

United States of America,)	No. 2:03-092
)
v.)
)
Racheal Parks,)	ORDER AND OPINION
)
Defendant.)
)

I. Background

This matter is before the court on defendant's motion to have the court reconsider its former denial of her motion to suspend the imposition of the sentence against her and to correct the sentence against her. As no other grounds for relief are asserted, this motion is essentially a request for post conviction relief under 28 U.S.C. § 2255. Defendant pled guilty to drug conspiracy charges and was consequently sentenced to a term of 87 months in federal prison. She now challenges her sentence under the Sixth Amendment and the Supreme Court's decision in United States v. Booker, 125 S. Ct. 738 (2005).

In Booker, the Supreme Court reaffirmed its holding from Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000), stating "Any fact (other than a prior conviction) which is necessary to support a sentence exceeding the maximum authorized by the facts established by a plea of guilty or a jury verdict must be admitted by the defendant or proved to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt." Booker, 125 S. Ct. at 756. In so doing, the Court explicitly found the Federal Sentencing Guidelines subject to its holding and subsequently excised the provisions within the guidelines themselves that made their application mandatory. As a result, defendants whose cases were still on direct review became eligible for re-sentencing under the new regime.

Defendant's conviction became final on July 9, 2004,¹ before the Court's decision in Booker on January 12, 2005; therefore, in raising her challenge, she is necessarily asking this court to apply Booker's holding to her case retroactively. Existing law does not permit such an application.²

II. Analysis

The determination of whether to apply any particular rule of law retroactively involves multiple steps. First, the court must determine whether the rule of law is a substantive rule or a procedural rule because new substantive rules generally apply retroactively while new procedural rules generally do not apply retroactively. Schriro v. Summerlin, 124 S. Ct. 2519, 2522-2523 (2004). Second, if the rule is procedural, the court must then determine whether it is a "new" rule. See Beard v. Banks, 124 S. Ct. 2504, 2510 (2004). If it is a new procedural rule, then the court must further determine whether it is a "watershed" rule. See id. If the rule of law is either a substantive criminal law or a new watershed rule of criminal procedure, then it must be applied retroactively. All others will not be applied retroactively.

¹ June 25, 2004 is the date judgment was entered against defendant, but she is accorded ten days after entry of that judgment to note an appeal, see Fed. R. App. P. 4(b)(1)(A), unless the court extends the appeal period under Fed. R. App. P. 4(b)(4). Defendant did not note an appeal; therefore, the judgment against her became final when her right to pursue that appeal expired on July 9, 2004.

² Defendant argues that lower courts have jurisdiction to decide cases of retroactivity on initial petitions under 28 U.S.C. § 2255 for new rules announced by the Supreme Court and thus argues that this court has authority to grant her relief under § 2255. For the reasons expressed in this opinion, the court finds that defendant is not entitled to relief under § 2255 even if this court is authorized to make such determinations; therefore, it is inconsequential whether her petition is denied because the issue must be decided by a higher court or denied on the merits of the claim.

A. Substantive or procedural

“A rule is substantive rather than procedural if it alters the range of conduct or the class of persons that the law punishes.” Schiro, 124 S. Ct. at 2523 (citing Bousley v. United States, 523 U.S. 614, 620-621 (1998) and Saffle v. Parks, 494 U.S. 484, 495 (1990)). By contrast, “rules that regulate only the manner of determining the defendant’s culpability are procedural.” Id.

The holdings of Appendi and Booker do not address the scope of conduct prohibited by the criminal law, nor do they speak to the class of persons affected by that law. Instead, the high Court rulings realign the method of determining what conduct has occurred (and the threshold of proof applicable in that determination) with the mandates of the United States Constitution. As the Seventh Circuit put it, “No conduct that was forbidden before Booker is permitted today” McReynolds v. United States, 397 F.3d 479, 481 (7th Cir. 2005). The change effected is that judges are no longer bound by sentences prescribed by the Guidelines based on facts they have found by a preponderance of the evidence. In returning judicial discretion to a sentencing scheme based on statutory minimums and maximums, in re-allocating the duties of essential fact-finding to the juries, and in re-affirming the standard of proof attached to that fact-finding, the Supreme Court fine-tuned the machinery that carries out the interdiction of the criminal law, the process. Consequently, the rule announced in Booker is procedural.

B. New or then-existing

Because Booker's edict is procedural, the court operates against the background that it would not generally be applied retroactively, but in the foreground that there are nearly always exceptions in the law. In order for a criminal procedural rule to be applied retroactively, it must be "new" and it must be a "watershed rule." See Beard, 124 S. Ct. at 2510. A new rule is one that "breaks new ground or imposes a new obligation on the States or the Federal Government." Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288, 301 (1989). Said another way, the court must "assay the legal landscape as of [the date defendant's judgment became final] and ask 'whether the rule later announced in [Booker] was dictated by then-existing precedent— whether, that is, the unlawfulness of [defendant's] conviction was apparent to all reasonable jurists." Beard, 124 S. Ct. at 2511 (citing Lambrix v. Singletary, 520 U.S. 518, 527-528 (1997)).

As the Sixth Circuit recognized in Humphress v. United States, 398 F.3d 855 (6th Cir. 2005), "[t]he Booker rule is clearly new." Id. at 861. Apprendi did not mandate the outcome in Booker. See Simpson v. United States, 376 F.3d 679, 681 (7th Cir. 2004) (observing that "before Blakely was decided, every federal court of appeals had held that Apprendi did not apply to guideline calculations made within the statutory maximum" and citing cases from twelve courts of appeals). It is also plain that reasonable jurists could disagree about whether Blakely v. Washington, 124 S. Ct. 2531 (2004), mandated the outcome in Booker. First, Blakely expressly reserved opinion on whether it applied to the Federal Sentencing Guidelines. Blakely, 124 S. Ct. at 2538 n.9. Second, Booker was decided over a four-justice dissent. See Booker, 125 S. Ct. at 802 (Breyer, J., dissenting). Third, there was deep division in the federal judiciary over whether Blakely made Booker inevitable. See Humphress, 398 F.3d at 861-862 (discussing the circuit split that occurred between the time Blakely was decided and the time Booker was decided). All of these factors inform the court’s decision that Booker indeed announced a new rule of criminal procedure.

C. Watershed or something less

A new rule of criminal procedure is of the “watershed” variety if it “implicat[es] the fundamental fairness and accuracy of the criminal proceeding.” Saffle, 494 U.S. at 495 (citing Teague, 489 U.S. at 311 (plurality opinion)). “That a new procedural rule is ‘fundamental’ in some abstract sense is not enough; the rule must be one ‘without which the likelihood of an accurate conviction is seriously diminished.’” Schriro, 124 S. Ct. at 2523 (citing Teague, 489 U.S. at 313.)) Furthermore, the Supreme Court has “repeatedly emphasized the limited scope of [this] exception, explaining that it is clearly meant to apply only to a small core of rules requiring observance of those procedures that . . . are implicit in the concept of ordered liberty.” Beard, 124 S. Ct. at 2513 (citing O'Dell v. Netherland, 521 U.S. 151, 157 (1997)). In fact, a qualifying rule would have to be “‘so central to an accurate determination of innocence or guilt [that it is] unlikely that many such components of basic due process have yet to emerge’” Id. (citing Graham v. Collins, 506 U.S. 461, 478 (1993)). And for that reason, “it should come as no surprise that [the Supreme Court has] yet to find a new rule that falls under [this] exception.” Id. at 2513-2514.

Booker is not destined to be the first new rule of criminal procedure to qualify under the watershed exception. As the Tenth Circuit observed, the holdings from Blakely (and now Booker) “do[] not affect the determination of a defendant’s guilt or innocence. Rather, [they address] only how a court imposes a sentence, once a defendant has been convicted.” United States v. Price, 400 F.3d 844, 848 (10th Cir. 2005).

Similarly, the Seventh Circuit has commented that:

Booker does not in the end move any decision from judge to jury, or change the burden of persuasion. The remedial portion of Booker held that decisions about sentencing factors will continue to be made by judges, on the preponderance of the evidence, an approach that comports with the sixth amendment so long as the guideline system has some flexibility in application.

McReynolds, 397 F.3d at 481. As the Supreme Court reasoned in Schiro:

The right to jury trial is fundamental to our system of criminal procedure, and States are bound to enforce the Sixth Amendment’s guarantees as we interpret them. But it does not follow that, when a criminal defendant has had a full trial and one round of appeals in which the State faithfully applied the Constitution as we understood it at the time, he may nevertheless continue to litigate his claims indefinitely in hopes that we will one day have a change of heart.

Schiro, 124 S. Ct. at 2526. While the Schiro Court was considering whether the rule making it unconstitutional for judges to find aggravating factors authorizing the death penalty was a watershed decision, most courts have found its reasoning persuasive in the present context. See Humphress, 398 F.3d at 863 (finding “Schiro’s reasoning applies with equal force to Booker”); McReynolds, 397 F.3d at 480 (finding Schiro is “all but conclusive” on the retroactivity of Booker); see also Varela, 400 F.3d at 868 (relying on Schiro and McReynolds for the same holding). This court, too, finds Schiro persuasive, as well as the courts of appeals that have addressed the issue so far. For those reasons, the court finds that Booker did not announce a watershed rule and cannot therefore be applied retroactively to cases on collateral review.³

III. Conclusion

For all of the foregoing reasons, the court finds that Booker does not apply retroactively to criminal judgments that became final before its release on January 12, 2005.⁴ Defendant's conviction became final on July 9, 2004, before the January 12, 2005 decision, and is therefore not subject to the rule announced in Booker. For that reason, defendant's claim for relief will be DENIED and her petition DISMISSED.

AND IT IS SO ORDERED.

s/ David C. Norton

David C. Norton
United States District Judge

May 18, 2005
Charleston, South Carolina

³ The court notes that all five federal courts of appeals that have addressed the issue so far have found that the rule from Booker is not retroactive to cases on collateral review. Guzman v. United States, 404 F.3d 139 (2d. Cir. Apr. 8, 2005); United States v. Price, 400 F.3d 844 (10th Cir. March 8, 2005); Humphress v. United States, 398 F.3d 855 (6th Cir. Feb. 25, 2005); Varela v. United States, 400 F.3d 864 (11th Cir. Feb. 17, 2005); McReynolds v. United States, 397 F.3d 479 (7th Cir. Feb. 13, 2005).

⁴ The Fourth Circuit recognized, in United States v. Hammoud, 381 F.3d 316, 345 (4th Cir. 2004), that the Supreme Court's decision in Blakely v. Washington, 124 S. Ct. 2531 (2004), did not itself invalidate the Federal Sentencing Guidelines; therefore, Booker's issue date rather than Blakely's date marks the dawning of a new rule and, consequently, the appropriate cut-off point for cases on direct review. See also Guzman, 404 F.3d at ____ (holding same); McReynolds, 397 F.3d at 481 (holding same).